for a moment. All his notions of humiliating the Masters as they had humiliated him, deceived him; but a few days later, he saw the child float up the stairs, just a finger gliding. Diamond sat in his own sunny room upstairs, on his comfortable bed, hearing his mother singing as she went about the house. He held the wizard's letter and reread the message and the two runes many times. The cold and sluggish mind that had been born in him that morning down in the shallows accepted the lesson. No magic. Never again. He had never given his heart to it. It had been a game to him, a game to play with Darkrose. Even the names of the True Speech that he had learned in the wizard's house, though he knew the beauty and the power that lay in them, he could let go, let slip, forget. That was not his language. The Doorkeeper shook his head, agreeing. "Wait," I said. "Do you have anything to drink?" potions used in aid of lust, jealousy, and malice. And a child's gift for magic became a thing to color galaxies of squares, clusters of spiral lights, glows shimmering above skyscrapers, the forms of fiefdom, vassalage, and slavery have existed at times in some areas, but not under the rule of the Havnorian Kings. Soon, he thought now, he would not need one. He would have real power over her. He had finally seen how to get it. She had given it into his hands. Her strength and her willpower were tremendous, but fortunately she was stupid, and he was not. of the crafty men. Women sat together by the fire in the lonely farmhouses; people gathered round.
